Hemorrhoids, or piles as they are commonly called, are a real pain as well as can lead surgical treatment in extreme cases. The good news is most cases can be dealt with through simple changes to your diet and exercise regimen. Piles are actually vascular cells in the anus accountable for stool control and only become a problem when they are inflamed.

Types of Hemorrhoids

There are two basic types of piles, internal and external. The difference between the two types is directly related to their location, as you can imagine. Those that occur over the dentate line are considered internal while those that are below it are believed external. What many people fail to realize is that external hemorrhoids are not necessarily outside of the anal hole or visible.

Causes

Generally, piles are directly related to bowel movements. Constipation and diarrhoea can both contribute to the occurrence of piles. The exact cause of hemorrhoids has not been clearly established in lab testing, however most would concur that pressure during pregnancy, prolonged sitting down and straining during bowel movements are key components.

Home Remedy

As stated above, most hemorrhoids remedy consists of nothing more than simple dietary changes, or even in cases of prolonged sitting a great increase in exercise may be justified. Here are a few things you should consider if you are suffering with hemorrhoids:
